The Rural Hill Directional Marker

The Rural Hill directional marker is one of only two extant solitary rock piers erected by Baxter Davidson, both of which are located in Huntersville. The second such standalone marker is the General Davidson Memorial, located on the south side of North Carolina Highway 73, directly across from the McGuire Nuclear Station. Standing on private residential property, a mere fifty feet from a busy Beatties Ford Road/Neck Road intersection, the continued integrity of the Rural Hill directional marker is at risk, given the rapid growth of both development and vehicular traffic in the immediate area. Indeed, the marker has already struck and damaged by an automobile at least once, necessitating its reconstruction and move slightly westward to its current location.

The Rural Hill directional marker stands approximately 8 feet tall, and measures approximately 3 feet in both length and width. It is located to the northwest of the intersection of Beatties Ford and Neck Roads. It features a metal plaque, which reads: “MAJOR JOHN DAVIDSON’S / HOMESTEAD. / BUILT 1788 BURNED 1886.” Atop the plaque is a stylized depiction of a hand indicating the direction of the homestead, also known as Rural Hill.

Plaque on Rural Hill directional marker

Like the Rural Hill cemetery wall, the stem or visible face of the Rural Hill directional marker is composed of alternating strings of rough-faced dark brown and white stones. The stones are embedded in mortar, and the stem of the marker rises perpendicularly from a toeless foundation to a pyramidal cap decorated with small, smooth, white stones. The cap is topped by a large flint rock finial that adds an additional 12 to 15 inches in height to the pier. The pier is surrounded by a small pentagon-shaped landscaped area bordered by large dark brown stones similar in appearance to those used to construct the pier.
