

Properties from the Post World War II Years Identified as eligible for the National Register of Historic Places.

It is sometimes difficult for the general public to realize that historic preservation seeks to preserve all parts of the community's built environment, even when a certain architectural style has gone into disfavor. The years from 1945 until 1965 witnessed profound changes in Charlotte-Mecklenburg. Charlotte College, now UNCC, was established. Interstate 85 opened to traffic. Ownership of automobiles increased greatly. Suburban developments multiplied. These changes were reflected in the types of buildings that appeared in the optimistic post-war era. The most significant from those years still standing in Charlotte-Mecklenburg are listed below.
