Ordinance – Faires Farm Silos

WHEREAS, the two Faires Farm Silos (circa 1951 and 1951-1978) are historically and architecturally significant as the only known extant silos within the Charlotte city limits that demonstrate in such close proximity the two primary means of 20th century silo construction, namely stacked bands of poured concrete, and interlocking concrete staves bolstered by steel reinforcement hoops; and

WHEREAS, the Faires Farm Silos are also historically significant as two of the few remaining original agricultural structures indicative of both Charlotte's early agrarian roots and Mecklenburg County's transition from its once-dominant cotton monoculture to a more resilient, diversified farming economy that ultimately enabled Charlotte to become the large urbanized commercial center it is today; and

WHEREAS, the Faires Farm Silos are also historically significant as evidence of a unique early twentieth century period when collaborative relationships among diverse national, state, and local organizations proactively benefitted local citizenries and economies, including promotion of new agricultural technologies by the federal government, practical resources and educational opportunities for local farmers provided by state agricultural departments and schools and county extension agents, and creative financing solutions from local banks to encourage the area's agricultural transition to the cultivation of diversified crops and livestock; and

WHEREAS, the Faires Farm Silos are also historically significant as the last known extant structures of the Faires' 330-acre Charolaise cattle farm, operated during the mid-20th century by Frank and Viola Faires in the once rural northeast quadrant of Charlotte now known as University City; and

WHEREAS, the Faires Farm Silos – at least one of which was constructed by hand by Frank Faires – are also historically significant for their association with Frank Faires, whose Faires Trailer Company was one of North Carolina’s first mobile home dealerships when it opened in 1937 and later expanded to become one of the South’s largest mobile home businesses; and

WHEREAS, the Faires Farm Silos are also historically significant for their association with Viola Faires, an award-winning local homemaker whose celebrated talents garnered numerous accolades, including hundreds of Mecklenburg County Fair ribbons and the title of Mecklenburg County’s “Homemaker of the Year” for three consecutive years, from 1962 to 1964; and

WHEREAS, based on the additional information further detailed in the Faires Farm Silos Local Landmark Designation Report (December 2025), all of which is incorporated herein by reference, the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Historic Landmarks Commission has demonstrated that the property known as the Faires Farm Silos possesses special significance in terms of its history, architecture, and/or cultural importance; and
